

Covering

Ever since people began to ponder and measure results, success never needed degree of education but the level of understanding about the job, work or subject to be done or think about.

History is evident about the fact that most of the successful personalities were not very well qualified and always stressed, more, about the level of maturity and exposure rather than the qualifications. Though, education being the most important aspect of human race after humanity hardly mattered for the rate of success humans have achieved. It solely depended on a mere chance and motivation given to persons they deserved.

Chance and motivation are the two things that any person needs to get above the boundaries of qualification and success. Thus, achieve more than employers' or recruiters' hope and expectation.
